Weinan Weihe Grand Bridge is a part of Zhengzhou–Xian High-Speed Railway connecting Zhengzhou and Xi'an, China

History of Weinan Weihe Grand Bridge

The 79,732 km long bridge (49,543 speeds) crosses the Wei River twice, as well as many other rivers, such as the Ling River, Luofu River, Xi River, Shi Di River and many others, high roads and railways

Once completed, it was the longest bridge in the world, but two new bridges on the Beijing–Shanghai High-Speed Railway completed in 2010 surpassed

The bridge was completed in 2008 but the railway itself has no vehicle information until 6 February 2010. It is currently the 3rd longest bridge in the world.

During the construction of the Weinan Weihe Grand Bridge, there were at least 10,000 workers, 2,300,000 cubic meters of concrete and 45,000 tons of steel.

The Weinan Weihe Grand Bridge is part of the Zhengzhou-Xian High-Speed Railway connecting both the Zhengzhou and Xi'an parts of China. Its total length is 79,732 meters. Construction began in 2008 and it was opened for high-speed rail in 2008.
